

How to be a Clinical Audit Change Agent

"The most important part of the audit cycle is making change"
Professor Richard Baker* et al

Enthusiastic and passionate.
Change agents possess the ability to inspire others. They are respected and gain buy-in.

Top communicators.
Change agents not only have a clear vision, they are skilled at communicating it. They are inclusive and work in partnership.

Tenacious.
Change agents don't give up when the going gets tough! They are resilient and relentless.

Strong. Change agents ask the tricky questions. They don't protect the status quo. They see and see the bigger picture.

Reflective. Change agents are self-critical. They take responsibility and have a hunger to expand their knowledge and broaden their skills.
